Hammering away

A new independent auction company is being launched on Merseyside.

Liverpool-based Kate Hughes (pictured), formerly senior valuer at Sutton Kersh Auctions, has set up her own company, Merseyside Property Auctions.

Last year, Kate was nominated for a Your Move Woman in Property award, after helping to achieve record annual sales of £37 million in Liverpool.

A member of the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors and a member of the National Federation of Property Professionals, Kate has high hopes to take her new business forward. She said: "It was time to move on from where I was working, but it was all very amicable. I believe I can build on my experience and record of achievement in the auction business to provide a really first class auction service here at MPA and grow a great new property business on Merseyside.

"When times are hard, people are on the look-out for a bargain – and Merseysiders know a good bargain when they see one. We offer viewings six days a week, free auction appraisals and regular emails and feedback for our customers."

MPA's first auction will take place in September at the Marriott Hotel, Speke, offering a mixture of residential and commercial property.
